‘Urban tourism’ is a major economic activity that stimulates local economic growth and social change due to its complementarity with other economic activities, its contribution to GDP, job creation, foreign exchange and services exports.

Tourism is a powerful engine for the local economic and social development of cities as it can also improve infrastructure, create a skilled labour force, stimulate local business entrepreneurship, develop public-private partnerships and attract other industries and services.

Tourism in the urban areas creates spatial dynamics for transforming the urban landscape through the rejuvenation of public space, public infrastructure and connectivity, development of local amenities and recreational facilities and hence builds a quality visitor experience while safeguarding and enhancing the quality of life for the local community.

A ‘2030 vision’ for urban tourism requires a new thinking to optimize the needs and expectations of the new customer and to facilitate inclusive economic and social growth, structural transformation and innovation by empowering local citizens. This vision must also address the changing dynamics of technology and its significant impact on the consumer behaviour as well as on the economic, social and spatial structures, modes of transport, new business models, governance and research tools for tourism.

A ‘2030 vision’ for urban tourism needs to focus on sustainability and competitiveness by putting in place a long-term vision and strategic planning. To achieve this, it is extremely important to address the ways urban tourism is planned, developed and managed, as well as how it is perceived by both visitors and residents. A strong, sustainable and inclusive ‘2030 vision’ for urban tourism can only be secured through dialogue, coordination, cooperation and partnerships between all the related public and private stakeholders and the civil society.

The 7th UNWTO Global Summit taking place in Seoul, a well-known smart urban destination, will bring together high level representatives from National Tourism Administrations as well as local authorities and related stakeholders, serving as a platform to exchange experiences and expertise to set a shared vision on urban tourism that embraces innovation, digital transformation and sustainability.
I welcome you to Seoul for the 7th edition of the UNWTO Global Summit on Urban Tourism. My thanks to the Seoul Metropolitan Government for hosting us and to the Ministry of Culture, Tourism and Sports of the Republic of Korea, and the Korea Tourism Organization, for their support and partnership in bringing this summit to Seoul.

Around half of the world’s population lives in urban areas and this figure will grow to 70% by 2050. It is vital therefore that we work together on a sustainable urban agenda that reaches into all sectors, including tourism.

Tourism, as one of the fastest-growing economic sectors of our times, contributes to several of the UN Sustainable Development Goals. Cities and urban areas are increasingly popular destinations for tourists for both business and leisure purposes, generating income that can support the socio-economic and cultural development of many cities and their surroundings.

On the other hand, the growing number of urban tourists puts pressure on natural resources, infrastructure, services and mobility, and it leaves a socio-cultural footprint on destinations. The sustainability of urban tourism needs more efficient, better planned and managed cities that can harness new technologies and innovation in order to manage and mitigate the pressures of tourism growth, in addition to population growth and climate change.

This challenge transcends tourism, which is why UNWTO fully supports the New Urban Agenda, spearheaded by the United Nations (UN). Adopted in 2016, this Agenda commits governments around the world to supporting urban economies increase productivity through high-value-added sectors, including tourism. Both technological upgrading and innovation, along with sustainable tourism, are listed as actionable transition areas.

Addressing such challenges for urban tourism is a complex task. There is a pressing need for a sustainable urban tourism roadmap and to position the sector in the wider urban agenda. Answering this need is our primary focus at this year’s UNWTO Global Summit on Urban Tourism. I look forward to our productive discussions and trust that together we can set an urban tourism vision for 2030 that will help us build cities for residents and visitors alike.

Zurab Pololikashvili
Secretary-General, World Tourism Organization (UNWTO)
